The Wrestling Contest at Hammersmith.
(Catch-as-Catch-Can Style.)

Tom Pevier v. H. Lutthy. A considerable amount of excitement prevailed when the pair of youthful giants met to try conclusions on the wrestling platform. Lutthy was the man of the two, but Pevier was possessed of immense strength, especially in the arm department, and he was the man for whom the spectators were destined.

Lutthy is Tom's formidable bogey. Pevier gained the first fall by seeing his rival the waist, and when both were on the floor the last name settled his man by the half-nelson. The second bout was a prolonged affair, and they made frequent visits to the mat, but Pevier's control of the court assumed a perpendicular attitude when practicable.

Such a battle of the giants has seldom been witnessed, and scarcely a sound was heard while the desperate conflict was proceeding. Pevier wrested for all he was worth. The same remarks applies to Lutthy. But the champion weight-lifter's stamina prevailed. Lutthy was very expertly grasped, firstly by a half-buttock, and finally by a more con croll ever. Consequently Tom became champion heavy weight wrestler of Hammersmith.

From whatever, or wherever Mr. Pevier may rank as a wrestler, there can be no question about his stature in the other branch of sport. Without doubt, he is a born weightlifter, perfected by long continued practice. No he has not made himself strong, he was born so. He has not a stunted form of development, that standing the other of its due nutrient. A perfect figure from the classic point of view, built from the ground upwards in one unlooked line of symmetry.
